THE COBDEN CLUB.

INFORMATION REGARDING THIS FAMOUS ORGANIZATION.

Its Object and Members—What It Has Done Already in the United States. Some of Its Publications—Its American Members.

A correspondent asks for information regarding the Cobden club, of England, and as we are now told that members of this famous organization are contributing money to influence the elections in Ohio and elsewhere this fall, it may not be amiss to let our readers know something about this powerful and influential club.

It was formed in 1866, the year after Mr. Cobden's death, "with the object of encouraging the growth and diffusion of those economic and political principles with which Mr. Cobden's name is associated." The management of the club, together with the election of members, is intrusted to a committee, three of whom form a quorum. This is a close corporation with a vengeance. The members are not elected by the club, but by a committee sitting with closed doors and only three are needed to act, and this committee manages the whole affairs of the club. The members consist of the highest and most influential men in English politics and at least a hundred are members of the British parliament, and the aggregate wealth of its members would reach many hundreds of millions of pounds. No wonder then that its influence is boundless and sure to be felt wherever it is extended. But of course what our readers are interested mostly in is what it is doing in the United States. That it should do anything at all seems the height of impudence. But that it has done and is still doing work in this country are matters of fact and easy to prove. In its report of 1887, at its annual meeting of July 89, we find the following:

"The Cobden club attains its majority this year, and your committee ventures to say the members may congratulate themselves on a very good twenty-one years' work. Something has been done by this club in the twenty-two years since Mr. Cobden died to keep the name of the great Free-trader green and his influence fresh in the current of political life. His policy and his work have been kept well in evidence at home and abroad. There are champions of Free-trade in all parts of the British empire and in most of the countries of the world whose interest, zeal and enthusiasm in the cause are due in a large degree to the work and teaching of the Cobden club."

On another page we find the following:

"The work of the committee consists principally in the publication and circulation of books and pamphlets in accordance with the objects of the club. These writings have been distributed very extensively in this country and in all parts of the world."

On page 150 begins a list of these publications thus distributed, containing such works as "Report on the United States Revenue," by David A. Wells; "Leavitt on England and America;" "The Creed of Free-trade," by David A. Wells; "Free-trade and Protection in the United States," by Joseph Wood; "The Western Farmer of America," by Augustus Mongredien; "The Future Work of Free-trade in English Legislation," a first prize essay, by C. S. Troup; "A Primer of Tariff Reform," by David A. Wells, Norwich, Conn.; "The Economic Free-trade and Free-trader's Guide," first edition, edited by R. R. Bowker, New York Free-trade club; "The Industrial Situation and the Question of Wages, a Study in Social Physiology," by J. Shoenhof.

Among the leaflets distributed we find: "The Effect of Protection in America," by Sir William Bomer Forcewood, 270,000 copies: "United States Protection versus British Free-trade," by Right Hon. W. E. Baxter, M. P., 200,000. A note at the end of the list informs us that the total number of copies of these circulars and pamphlets, exclusive of leaflets, distributed since July, 1866, reaches 1,011,790, and that the total number of leaflets thus distributed up to that date is 10,800,000, and that:

"In addition to these circulars the club has distributed several hundred thousand copies of newspapers, reprints and slips containing accounts of the meetings of the club, and of various subjects connected with the principles advanced by the club.

"From the beginning of the year 1887 alone over 600,000 copies of such newspapers and slips have been circulated."

It will be noticed that this report expressly says, "These writings have been distributed very extensively in this country (meaning England) and in all parts of the world." It is a matter of common notoriety that one of these works, to wit, "The Western Farmers of America," by Mongredien, was circulated among the farmers of our western country gratuitously in large quantities.

This very list shows that the Cobden club circulated in all 85,000 copies of this pamphlet. From whence is derived the funds for this work? In the report for 1886 occur these words, "And never before was so great a demand made upon the resources of the club for Free-trade literature, a demand which the committee was able to meet by virtue of the special publication fund so generously subscribed by the members of the club and others in response to Mr. Potter's appeal."

Another way of disseminating these doctrines is by offering prizes for essays by the students in the colleges of the world.

This shows to some extent the workings of this foreign organization which is trying to break down the commercial supremacy of other nations, and of the United States in particular. Perhaps if its members were only Englishmen we should not wonder that so much money and pains should be spent to get control of the markets of this country. But we find among its members a long list of Americans, and these we give herewith for the information of our readers, showing the full list as it existed in 1888, although there are several names of persons recently deceased. The list should be studied carefully, as we want our readers to know the names of these Americans (?) who are loaning their support to a foreign organization to break down the industries of their own country:

Why I Am a Protectionist.

I believe, 1. That domestic employment and production are essential to national wealth and independence.

2. That the earning power of labor measures the purchasing and consuming power of a people and determines the volume of business, upon which all classes depend for prosperity.

3. That the highest wages for labor consistent with fair returns upon capital and fair prices for products promotes the greatest national prosperity, because a man earning three dollars a day has three times the wealth creating power of a man earning one dollar.

4. That unrestricted foreign competition would destroy our industrial independence, reduce the wages of labor, shrink the volume of internal trade, deplete our national wealth, enrich Europe and ruin us—hence I am a Protectionist. Hon. J. Hanson, of Georgia.

Is This Merely "Tariff Reform?"

It is a humiliating and disgraceful confession, a base slander, to say that the American people need any laws to protect them from competition with any other nation. Nothing has made England what she is but her Free-trade, her unfettered commerce. Compare our resources and advantages with hers, and imagine what our position would be among the nations if unhampered by the fetters of Protection.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

How long will intelligent voters continue to believe that there is no movement toward Free-trade in this country? That opposition to Protection is only a demand for a harmless tariff "reform?"

The western farmer's instinct is wiser than Mr. Gladstone's philosophy. The farmer knows that the larger the home market the better are his prices, and that as the home market is narrowed his prices fall.—James G. Blaine.

A Game of Freeze Out.

At last the barbed wire men have quit knifing each other and consolidated and formed a trust, advancing the royalties on all outsiders with small plants so as to effectually freeze them out and to have their own way in bleeding the farmer. Now let the farmers unite on the no fence plan—which they should do if barbed wire could be had for the hauling—and effectually freeze out the barbed wire men.

Test Your Cows.

The butter tester is coming into general use in the East. This is a simple, cheap instrument by which the dairyman can tell with exactness the amount of butter in 100 pounds of milk of one cow. This enables him to weed out the poor cows. In dairies without some way to test the available butter fat in the milk of each cow, about one-half of the herd does not pay for their keep.

Shoot the Birds.

If they raid your fruit trees and garden seeds. They often take all, leaving none for the planter. Birds which habitually feed on fruits and seeds are of no particular value as insect destroyers. The common red headed linnet is the worst bird on this Coast. Its nest and young should be destroyed at all times, also the English sparrow.

THE DANBURY NEWSMAN

JAMES MONTGOMERY BAILEY AND HIS GENIAL PERSONALITY.

The Well Known Humorist as He Appears at Home—How He Came to Write His Sketches and an Account of His Career.

Almost the first thing you see after coming out of the Danbury railway station is a plain red brick building which stands up the street on the other side, with "The Danbury News" in gilt letters across its face. If you should cross the muddy street, as I did, with the rain beating down in torrents, you would be doubly glad to feel the kindly smile of welcome which Mr. Bailey bestows on all newcomers. They tell me in Danbury that when a tramp comes to town he makes a bee line for "Monte" Bailey, as everybody calls the genial editor, and Monte has never been known to turn any needy one away empty handed. Mr. Bailey's face is one of those to which a photograph cannot do justice, because in the photograph you miss the humorous and kindly cordiality that illuminates it. Then there is a peculiar twinkle of the eye, accompanied by the faintest suggestion of a movement of the body, as if in imagination he poked you in the ribs and had to hold himself in from doing it in reality. This happens when Mr. Bailey says something which might be called a Baileyism. It is a genial kind of humor that he has, and because it is unstudied it is good and never flat. Withal he is truly modest, like Bill Nye and other great men.

J. M. BAILEY.

He took me into his back office, put me in his own chair and then sat down by the side of the desk and began to talk. While we were thus occupied a friend came in, and Monte turned on him with the kindly shafts of his wit, rallying him about everything that came into his head. This gentleman told me afterward that Mr. Bailey was always the same. "I never enjoyed myself so much in my life as I have with Monte Bailey," he said, "and I must say that, while he has written some mighty funny things, I like him better than his books." And yet, when I asked him why he didn't write any more, his reply was: "I am played out. If any one asks you, tell them that." He continued: "If there is anything which I disbelieve in, it is for a humorist to allow the machine to enter into his work, and the moment that he feels it he had better stop."

I handed him one of his books, which was lying on his desk, and asked him if he would indicate those sketches which had been the most popular. He stood there with the book in his hand and started on a train of reminiscences. Both of us forgot the object of my visit, and for more than an hour he ran on.

"You are too young," he said, "to appreciate how we used to live in the old days in New England when I was a boy. Now that sketch of the boy carrying in wood. Of course, I was that boy. I was the eldest of a family, and it seemed to me as if we were always moving. My stepfather had the kindest heart in the world, but a terrible temper. I remember myself standing in the kitchen one day while he was trying to move the stove. Although I was but a child, it was so extremely funny to me to see the varying expressions on his face that every once in a while I was obliged to run out in the back yard and roll over, all doubled up with laughter."

These early impressions evidently clung to Mr. Bailey with great tenacity and gave a peculiar vividness to his sketches. One of his associates at the time when he was writing them said that when Monte was writing in his den he could always tell when a happy thought struck him by a peculiar chuckle that came through the cracks of the door, and when he heard this he would say to himself, "There, Monte's getting off a good thing." I asked Mr. Bailey about his experience as a lecturer. He laid down his book on the desk and standing up with his hands in his pockets and swaying gently backward and forward, he replied:

"That's where I made a big mistake; but, the fact is, I never thought I could do it. At one time I was offered $35,000 for a course of lectures, but I never had much experience with an audience, and I was afraid that what I said would fall flat. Some time afterward Bret Harte gave a lecture here, and I introduced him to the audience. I felt keenly the solemnity of the occasion, and suppose I had some diffidence about it, and perhaps this very thing is what caught them; and then I felt rather abashed in the presence of such a great writer as Bret Harte. When I got through speaking Harte turned to me and whispered, 'D——n you, Bailey, you have taken all the wind out of my sails.'"

In 1874 he visited England, Scotland, Ireland and France, and on his return lectured on "England from a Back Window." While he was traveling in England one day on the train his wife wanted to buy a book to read. The boy handed him one and he said, as he gave it to her, "Here, my dear, is a book that I think you will be much interested in." It was a copy of "Life in Danbury." This book, by the way, is the first Mr. Bailey published, and was compiled from the sketches which appeared in The News. The principal events in Mr. Bailey's life are as follows: He was born Sept. 25, 1841, in Albany, his people afterward moving to Rome, N. Y., where he received a common school education and learned the carpenter's trade. At eighteen he went to Danbury, where he worked at his trade for two years, and in 1862 enlisted in the Seventeenth Connecticut volunteers, serving three years, until the end of the war. His first literary work was done on the New York Mercury, in 1869.

While he was in the army he corresponded with the Danbury Times. In 1865 he bought this paper, and in 1870 consolidated it with The Jeffersonian, calling the new paper The News. It was in 1868-9 that his paragraphs were copied in other papers, but it was not until 1873 that the circulation of The News was affected. January of that year the circulation was 1,920. On the 1st of September following the edition was over 30,000. In addition to "Life in Danbury" he has published "The Danbury News Man's Almanac" (1874), "England from a Back Window" (1878), "They All Do It" (1878), "Mr. Phillips' Oneness" (1879) and "The Danbury Boom" (1880).

"Whenever I saw anything that struck me as funny," continued Mr. Bailey, "I would write it down just as it occurred to me. One of the most widely quoted things I ever wrote was 'The Wheelbarrow.' I was looking out of my office window one day when a man went by with a wheelbarrow. He slipped somehow and fell, and the way he and that wheelbarrow got tangled up was one of the funniest things I ever saw. I laughed till I cried, and then I sat down and wrote the sketch." He called my attention also to the Italian peanut vender, who is still plying his trade across the street from The News office, just as he was when Mr. Bailey wrote about him.

As I passed out of The News office and raised my umbrella I saw Mr. Bailey's face pressed against the window pane sending me a last farewell through the Danbury mist, and on my way down to the station, as I stopped in to chat for a moment with one of Danbury's most prominent citizens, he said, as he held out his hand: "I understand that you have been having a talk with Monte Bailey. Monte Bailey, young man, is one of the best hearted fellows that ever lived." TOM MASSON.

An Early Delicacy.

A sallow faced man, dressed in faded and insufficient garments, with a knotted, sandy beard, skipped lightly into a Danbury dry goods store yesterday afternoon. He had hugged up close to him in one arm a glass jar with a bit of dingy muslin over it. He wanted to see the proprietor, and a clerk obligingly pointed out that gentleman to him, who was then engaged in the herculean task of selling a lady half a yard of linen. The stranger stalked up to him.

"Be you the boss, mister?" he asked, with a seductive smile.

"Yes, sir. Anything I can do for you?"

"Yes," said the stranger, carefully depositing the jar on the counter, and with an air as if the counter had been erected with this object specially in view. "I've got a prime article of horseradish here that I want to sell you."

"I don't want to buy any," said the merchant, with a tinge of pettishness in his tone.

"It's a prime article, I can tell ye."

"I don't want it."

"But you ain't looked at it, you ain't tried it," argued the vender.

"I tell you I don't want it."

"You can have it for fifty cents, although it's worth seventy-five. I'll dump it right out in a paper, or I'll leave the jar and you kin bring it back tomorrow."

"I don't want it, I say. Take it away," demanded the merchant, flushing slightly in the face.

"Don't you git in a hurry, boss," persuasively urged the proprietor of the condiment. "You don't git such horseradish as this every day, I kin inform ye. I growed the roots that came from my self, by jickey! I growed 'em back of a barn, an I took as much care of their cultivation as if they had been my own flesh and blood. Why, I've got up in the dead of night with a lantern, and went out back of that barn an tucked them up, as it were. An I said to my ole woman, sez I, 'Ole woman, them roots will go to make glad the heart of a merchant prince,' sez I, an here they be, grated up an ready for the table. What do you say?"

"I say, as I said before, that I don't want your stuff, and I want you to take it away from here at once," said the merchant, who had now become very red in the face.

"Stuff!" ejaculated the man, with a start, while his eyes watered and his under lip trembled. "Stuff! You call that stuff—that which grew right behind my own barn, an which has had a lantern above it in the dead of night—grated up by my own hands, an with a pint of the best cider vinegar in the country dancing through its veins—you call it stuff, do you? an you stand right here an in the broad light of day declare that none of that horseradish will fresco your cold meat, an set up before your children like a thing of beauty? All right." (He gathered the jar up in his arm again.) "You can't have this horseradish now. You needn't whimper for it. Not a word from you," he added, with as much earnestness as if the merchant had dropped on his knees and was agonizingly begging for a hopeless favor.

"You ain't got money enough in your hull store to buy a grain of it. You shouldn't git as much as a smell of it if you was to git right down on your snoot an howl till you were cracked open. Gosh dum me!" he suddenly shouted, "I'll go out on the boundless prairie an eat every bit of it myself, if it burns a hole clean through me as big as a tunnel, an sets the prairie afire an devastates the land."

And with this terrific threat he strode gloomily away in search of a prairie.

The Victoria Cross.

The question has been asked, How many officers are entitled to wear the Victoria cross? I am able to answer the question. The mere statement of number reveals at once the exclusive character of this reward for valor. No less, however, than thirty nine general officers are entitled to wear it—an indication of the fact that promotion to exalted military rank in England has in a great many cases been the reward of heroic merit. Thirty colonels and lieutenant colonels are entitled to wear the decoration, twenty-two majors, eleven captains, eight lieutenants and five quartermasters possess the same privilege.

Fifty-nine of the medals, however, are held by noncommissioned officers and privates, thirty-four being in possession of privates, five of lance corporals, three of corporals, seven of sergeants, six of color sergeants, two of quartermaster sergeants and two sergeant majors. One clergyman possesses the medal, the Rev. J. W. Adams, who was formerly attached to the Bengal ecclesiastical establishment.—Manchester Examiner.

The Captain's Trials.

Pretty Passenger—Captain, did the ship really make twenty knots every hour last night?

The Captain—Yes, miss.

P. P.—And what do you do with so many knots?

The Captain (gruffly)—Toss 'em overboard.

P. P.—Oh, how queer! I thought the sailors had to untie them during the day.

THE ARIZONA KICKER.

Nothing to Fear from Tom.—We are Sure to Get There.

POOR SHOOTING.—As we were coming across the sand lots the other evening, after spending a couple of very agreeable hours at the adobe residence of the Widow Jackson, some would be assassin, who was in hiding, fired six bullets at us from a revolver. We think it was Tom Bigelow. We think so because Tom has shot at everybody in town and never hit any one. He didn't hit us. Being armed only with a bowie knife, we lit out as soon as the shooting began, and the last bullet went ten feet above our head.

We did think of hunting Tom up yesterday and splitting his ear with a bullet as a great moral lesson, but on second thought we concluded not to waste the time. He'll keep on blazing away around this town until somebody gets vexed at the noise and then he'll suddenly go hence. We don't want his funeral expenses on our hands.

HE'S A SUBSCRIBER.—Last week, as noticed by our contemporary in a double leaded article with three scare heads on it, Jim Benshaw, who owns the cactus ranch out on the Tucson road, refused to take his copy of The Kicker out of the postoffice. Jim not only owed us $1.50 on subscription, but refused his paper to hurt our feelings. He's been sore on us ever since we refused to lend him our white shirt—the only one in town—to go on a drunk in.

We want to show an accommodating spirit toward all, and we have the name of being a good fellow, but we want to say right here and now that we believe a common wool shirt is plenty good enough for any man in this town to get drunk in. If it isn't, he'd better stay sober.

When we saw Jim's little game we mounted our mule and rode over to interview him. He was expecting us. One bullet went through our hat and another raked our mule, but after that Jim lay down and we dug the bullet out of his shoulder and helped him into his dugout. He not only paid us all arrears in spot cash, but a dollar on advance subscription, and as soon as able to move about he will personally canvass for subscribers.

WE SHALL GET THERE.—Last Friday evening we were nominated for mayor by acclamation, and this is equivalent to an election. We don't deny that we sought the nomination. We have had our eye on it for a year past. We shall also do our level best to snow our opponent under. We have been moved to this course by a desire to see the town well governed and because we believe the mayor should be the representative man of the town. We are that man. There's no use in filling and backing and talking about modesty and self conceit and all that. We lead this town. We know more than any ten men in it rolled together. We shall make the best mayor the town has ever had, and we shall see that all the city printing is given to The Kicker at legal rates.—M. Quad in New York World.

THE REPUBLICAN PRESS.

FRIDAY MORNING. OCTOBER 30, 1891

The REPUBLICAN PRESS is virtually the official paper of the county. All information concerning taxes, licenses, roads, etc., and all ordinances and order's made by the Board of Supervisors are published in its columns. If you want the county news in full, look to the PRESS for it.

THE big will contest has virtually been decided in favor of Searlls, but Hopkins will appeal to the higher courts.

We do not believe that our eminent jurist and banker, wool, hop and fruit grower, conceives it in his interest to have McKinley's safe guards to these great industries of 11 cts. on his wool, 15 cts. on his hops, two cts. on his prunes, swept away. The sole defence his market has against the immense surplus of South America and Australia, Austria, Germany, and France.

WANTED—TIN PLATE ROLLERS WHO ARE familiar with the business; wages double the price paid in England for the same work. Address Office of St. Louis Stamping Co., 96 Beekman St., New York or at the works St. Louis Mo. —New York Daly Times.

"Wages double the price paid in England for the same work." When you read the editorial page of the free trade Times "a theory confronts you. When you read the "help wanted" column of advertisments it is a condition that confronts you. "The tariff is a tax" on the poor laboring man.

No soldiers fought in the civil war under an American flag if made of bunting. It was all imported from England at a cost per piece of $25.00. Ben Butler, under a promise of making it cheaper and giving employment to poor American girls, secured a duty of 40 per cent upon it. He and his associates erected mills forthwith and within twelve years 13,000 looms were weaving bunting in the United States and the very best made on earth was sold for $18 per piece. "The tariff is a tax."

"The school girl buys the 25 ct. knife and becomes an expert at whittling, and there was really a prospect that the women of the next generation would be able to sharpen their own pencils. But McKinley has put his foot down on all this, and only the girls who can invest more than 25 cts. have any prospect of mastering the art of sharpening a pencil. The 25 ct. knife comes from Germany. The McKinley duty is so high that it can no longer be retailed as a 25 ct. knife and the sale is ruined."

Such is the stuff the Dispatch sends out as a tariff lesson for its readers. That ghoul, Mckinley, does not even spare to the school girl her two bit knife, he has placed an embargo of one cent on it. No more can she learn the graceful art of whittling—"no more."

"Pen knives or pocket knives of all kinds valued at not more than 50 cents per dozen, shall pay a duty of 12 cts. per dozen", says McKinley, schedule C, paragraph 165. Under this paragraph, all the two bit knives of the school girl come in, and more than ½ of them at 37½ cents per doz., a cost of 3⅛ cts. to the importer. McK. has made them cost 4⅛ cents. Really is no one in collusion with him in this conspiracy against the school girl and her two bit knife? Have we no sympathetic gentlemen of influence among us who can persuade Mr. Hofman or some one of our merchants to "head off" McKinley and still give the poor girl a knife for two bits which now cost him 4⅛ cts., instead of 3⅛ as it did before McK. began this war upon her—to accept from her a profit of 408 per cent instead of 572 per cent.

We would suggest a possible new field for the Quixotic heroism of the gallant Editor of the Dispatch. Instead of devoting all his energy and ability to the defamation and discouragement of our domestic industries why not give an occasional column to the woes of the school girl, to the softening of the hearts of our merchants— co-conspirators of McKinley—that she may recover the possibility of adding to her other graces, that of "artistically whittling," by re-granting her the possession of a two bit knife. In this his superior endowments, both natural and acquired, better fit him for a master that in the cold, impassioned pursuits of tariff schedules.

The American manufactures, repeats the Dispatch, "cannot make a knife of the quality of the foreign knife which will retail as low as 25 cents. He has tried and failed." And in another column points out the absurdity of protecting the American laborer because his greater ability and skill enable him to produce cheaper goods than the foreigner, "every time." X

THE "FARMER" SPEAKS.

EDITOR PRESS:—The Dispatch of the 16th makes the article "Check" in the PRESS of the 9th by your correspondent "X", the pretext, for 'tis only a pretext, for a scurrilous personal attack upon him.

In reading the editorial note which suggests that article, I believe and still believes—that I saw derision between the lines and I noticed it in the same temper. The Dispatch says I "changed its note in a contemptible, sneaking way to suit my purpose." There was but one statement of fact in that note which I quoted, word for word, omitting the prefix and location, only—This was the "sneaking change" of meaning.

There was one surmise, supposition, in same note which did not interest me and I did not notice. "We would judge, etc., he (X) then follows with a screed of a half column denouncing and ridiculing us for our check in thus insulting the farmer." Instead of quoting what I did say, he conceals the aim and scope of my article "to suit his purpose." It was devoted wholly, excepting seven lines, to an indictment of the "County Organ," the severest count being that in which it charged it with denouncing our purest public men as knaves and tricksters, as the accomplices of theives and robbers. This charge was especially directed to the shameless innuendoes flung at those christian gentlemen, President Harrison and Secretary Wanamaker, as junketing to the Pacific coast at the public expense, as parties to the Cape May gift scandal, and as donating $5,000 to the New York election fund, and the latter as an accomplice with the Keystone bank robberies. Any reader of the Dispatch can find columns of proof of the literal truthfulness of every charge in that indictment which the "smircher" he who commits the foul act or he who points to the proof of that act.

On another occasion he assailed an article in the PRESS for precisely this pretended cause, misquoting and changing sentences to suit his purpose, with as little foundation as in this instance. But he was careful, very careful, not to attack the correction of the Dispatch's gross errors which that article pointed out. His value is prodigious in the pursuit of the creatures of his imagination of shadows rather than the substance; this certainly is the part of prudence if not of ingenuousness.

Men who deliberately falsify and misrepresent an opponent in controversy, are dangerous people to have anything to do with." * * * "We do not besmirch ourselves with men of Mr. X's ideas of journalistic courtesy and decency." 'Tis not the "falsification and misrepresentation" but the proof of your falsifications which you cannot assail, and the irritation of their exposure which so enrages.

Our editor is a disputant by nature and education and "jumps in" with gusto whenever and wherever he imagines he has the slightest pretext and the possibility of placing his opponent at a disadvantage. Does any one familiar with his methods and habit, believe that if he could have shown the falacy of my refutation of his statements he would have failed to do it? Does any one believe that the bruiser Sullivan if knocked down by a vulgar blow would slink away because forsooth, he would not "besmirch" his blue-blooded first by "punching" the plebian head which directed the huge blow?

At places of public resort more than once have I heard the Dipatch's falsifications of the history of the country, culled from an unscrupulous partisan press quoted as authenticated facts unchallenged, and thought it quite time that a few of them, at least, should be publicly corrected. In a few instances I have done so from authorities which cannot be questioned. If this be "trying to open a controversy with the Dispatch," I shall on occasion, continue to try, and no amount of scurrility will deter me. And further, if this be to deliberately misrepresent an opponent, I plead guilty, and yet further fear its exquisitly fastidious sensibilities may be often shocked. More than this, I have not done. Not one word of personality, social or moral, as the PRESS will attest—have not even said that these falsifications were the fruit of a deliberate purpose, mental aberration or ignorance—do not know—do not care—they exist, and the Dispatch is their delighted zealous medium. To give them publicity tho' ignorance is a crime—'tis more if to deliberately deceive

A word as to journalistic courtesy and decency." The Dispatch's ideal and standard is well illustrated and authenticated by the article under notice, refined and classic; mildly forecast in its leader of the 2nd inst. and in its controversy with the St. Helena Star on suffrage restriction.

A few personal words, Editor PRESS, and I promise you no more, now or hereafter. In all my years of near three score and ten, I never entered, never graduated with the degree of P. B. from any school of billingstate. Am too aged to make the essay now. It were in vain certainly, for only "gentlemen" of cultured tastes, refined habits and an assured character could hope to win that degree and practice with impunity under it. X

JEALOUSY.

Disquisition Upon the Green-Eyed Monster by a Public School Essayist.

EMMETT MAGEE.

There is no passion more base, nor one which seeks to hide itself more than jealousy. No stronger proof is needed to show how contemptible a fault jealousy is, than the fact that no one is willing to acknowledge that he is jealous.

It is difficult under some circumstances to distinguish jealousy from envy, for they often run into one another and are blended together. The most prominent distinction seems to be that jealousy is always personal. The envious man desires some good which another possesses; the jealous man suspects another of seeking to deprive him of some good that he possesses.

Jealousy, in some respects, is preferable to envy, since it aims at the preservation of something which we think belongs to us.

Jealousy, however, is such a headstrong passion that it is much more dangerous than envy.

All other passions will listen to the voice of reason, but jealousy looks reason full in the face and says that she knows a great deal better than reason can tell her.

Listen to what jealousy can and does do: It violates contracts, breaks wedlock, betrays friends, dissolves society, and thinks that no one is good and that every one is doing or is trying to do them an injury.

If jealousy always made its appearance as jealousy it would be, comparatively speaking, harmless, but it is surprising how many different disguises it assumes. Sometimes it appears in the character of injustice or takes the form of rudeness and want of courtesy. At other times it borrows the garb of a virtue, humility, or sincerity, for instance, and then like a poisonous serpent under a beautiful flower it darts forth its sting in a place and manner that you little expect.

In nothing is jealousy more commonly shown than when under the fear that some one will supplant us in the affections of another. Here it assumes its greatest form. "He whose treasure was in womans love; who trusted as man once trusts and was deceived—that once gone there is no finding it again, no restoring it." Judge not too harsibly then of a jealous man or woman, remember that he or she suffers. To be sure it may be without cause but the suffering is there. Pity it, bear with it, for you yourself may one day be led by the insane passion of jealousy.

Some have said that jealousy is love, but this I doubt. Jealousy may be procured of love as ashes are by fire, yet jealousy will smother that love as ashes do the fire.

Jealousy is led by suspicion and suspicion magnifies little things.

We have a case in our courts at the present time—that of a murderer—who no doubt under the influence of this deadly passion took the life of a human being.

Finally, let me advance this to you as a fact: That a man to be genuine to himself must believe, and be believed, must trust, and be trusted.

ALMOST A DIVORCE.

A Ukiah Couple in Trouble.

During last month a slight mistake on the part of one of Ukiah's leading men came very near causing a breach in their family relations, that might have led to serious results.

The circumstances, though trivial, simply shows how much woman is interested in the proper management of her home. It seems that Mr. C. had been treating his wife very cool and this indifference was carried to the point of a family quarrel, the cause of which, as in most cases, could be traced to the culinary department, over which she presided with great pride and skill.

One day during her absence from home, a sack of flour was delivered at the house and upon its arrival was emptied into the bin by Mr. C. For a week following the bread was very poor, which fact the head of the house stubbornly attributed to negligence on the part of his wife. This she strenuously denied, the truth of her denial being subsequently demonstrated when the empty sack was brought to light and there was found wanting those magic words Golden Eagle.

The Press and the Pulpit.

Near Santa Cruz not long ago a preacher said that a newspaper that tells the truth, and the whole truth, cannot be a pecuniary success. The San Jaciato Register very neatly rejoins as follows:

"The minister who will at all times and under any circumstances tell the whole truth about his members, whether alive or dead, might not occupy the pulpit more than one Sunday, and in some cases might find it convenient to leave town. The pulpit and press go hand-in-hand with the whitewash brush and pleasant words, magnifying little virtues into big ones. The pulpit, the press, and the gravestone are the great saint-making triumverate.

THE INDIAN SCHOOL.

A Good Work Inaugurated at Pinoleville.

The completion of the new school at Pinoleville and the beginning, together with the establishment of the Ukiah Mission for Indians, is the consummation of a work begun by Rev. W. B. Priddy of St. John's M. E Church of Ukiah.

One year ago he began an appeal to the churches from Maine to California to help build the school. The amount which has been raized, $300, was contributed mainly from California and largely from San Francisco.

The building is completed and furnished, and school commenced Monday with Miss Martha Powers, of Bradford, Vt., as teacher. She is well qualified for the position, having had two years experience among the Osages in Indian Territory. The Government pays her a salary of $600 for ten months, and will rent the building which is now deeded to St. John's M. E. Church, Ukiah.

An organ for the school is on its way. This has been contributed by the Busy Bee Society of the First M. E. Church in Oakland.

Here is a good place to put in that any old school books, picture books, maps, charts, slates, etc., may be donated by any one from any part of the County, and will be thankfully received. They may be sent to the teacher, or to Rev. Priddy.

Rev. J. L. Burchard, formerly Agent of the Round Valley Reservation, was sent by the M. E. Conference, and draws a salary of $600 per year, $400 of which is furnished by the Women's Home Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, and the balance is pledged by Rev. Priddy and the auxiliary branch of the W. H. M. S. for California. Mr. Burchard resides here which is the headquarters of the Mission, and will preach at the chapel, Upper Lake, Potter Valley, Coyote Valley, and other places that may be reached.

The effort made in the direction of educating and civilizing our Indians is a worthy one, and it is expected that it will lead to the establishment of Industrial schools in the County by the government.

There are about 2000 Indians in the county and the field is a good one.

The Capell Case.

In addition to the report of last week the sentence was given Saturday the 14th, and was a five year term in San Quentin. The verdict and sentence occasioned some surprise to the friends of Capell. They expected much lighter results, if not acquittal. The evidence showed a persecution of the Harmon boys after the first act of self-defence. It was the after circumstance that caused his conviction.

JOLLY BRICK-LAYERS.

Kind reader, if you list awhile,
A moment or two you may beguile;
I want to introduce to you
A jolly brick-layer or two.

First I will place upon the list
A man who surely would be missed,
I mean the inimitable Jim Jones,
Who, every day in lusty tones,
"Put up that blasty, blasting line;
Point up your joints and strike them fine."

There's Dougherty Jack, with limber back,
Who throws in bricks by the ton;
He lets out a grin, and pockets his tin
Whenever his month's work is done.

There's George the tall, who beats them all,
While humming a nice little song,
Just as he'd "orghter" throws in the mortar
And drops the bricks where they belong.

There's Johnny Neary, small and airy,
Who also is one of the crew,
And every day, sits down to play
On his fiddle a turn or two.

There's Freddy Bell, the cow-boy swell,
The lady's fond delight:
At noon he plays his waltzes and lays,
And does the same at night.

And Emmett the quiet, who works and stays by it,
And is up to the news of the day;
He is heard a long way, when we all hear him say
With his musical voice, "Tight away."

There's Kelseyville Steve, that I must not leave,
Who throws a head-joint with a dab;
He's not very tall, but can reach a high wall,
As he throws in the brick with a grab.

Next comes the two Eds, and those of great heads,
Nolon and Butler so gay;
They both love the girls with long jaunty curls,
I'm afraid they'll be both led astray.

Clarence is not forgot in the sorry lot,
And lays them left-handed so fine;
He's up to his tricks, while he piles in the bricks
And gets them all down to the line.

I must not forget Day, the Benedict gay,
Who lays his bricks level and neat.
I think he'd best go a little more slow,
by eating less at the Elite.

Next comes Campbell Jack, with a hump to his back,
But he isn't like little Jack Horner,
For he can't with his thumb, pull out a 'plumb,'
Although he is placed at a corner.

O'Brien, the masher, the dude, the dasher;
He loves all the ladies, I guess,
He'd better look out, or with them he'll be 'out,'
And get in a horrible mess.

I will stand by the back of 'Many Horse Jack.'
He can save his money,
To give to his honey—
To the chain of love add a new link.

Obituary.

Died, in Ukiah, Wednesday, October 28, 1891, Jessie, son of J. S. O'Neal of Sanel Valley, aged 12 years 1 month and 28 days.

This fair young life has passed away, and the "Spirit has returned to God who gave it." Jessie was a child upon whom many hopes were fixed, but God has seen fit to call him away from the trials and troubles of this earthly life, and to invite him to His presence.

About one month ago he was taken ill with the fatal disease with which he died. From the first it baffled the skill of the physicians to whom he was taken. Last Saturday, the 24th, he was brought to Ukiah in the hope that better medical attendance would bring relief. He was remarkably cheerful during his entire illness. To every inquiry as to how he felt he would constantly answer, "I am feeling better." But about twenty minutes before he died he called his father to him and told him that he was going to die. He gave minute directions as to how he should be buried. It was his wish that his father should, with his own hands dress and prepare him for burial. The poor stricken father finds a sad pleasure in following his every request.

Now, dear boy, farewell! Jesus said, suffer the little ones to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. "Thou hast gone to Jesus and in the Sweet bye-and-bye, we hope to meet thee. A FRIEND.

SICK Head-Aches.

Sick-headaches are the outward indications of derangements of the stomach and bowels. As Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla is the only bowel regulating preparation of Sarsaparilla, it is seen why it is the only appropriate Sarsaparilla in sick-headaches. It is not only appropriate; it is an absolute cure. After a course of it an occasional dose at intervals will forever after prevent return.

Jno. M. Cox, of 735 Turk Street, San Francisco, writes: "I have been troubled with attacks of sick-headache for the last three years from one to three times a week. Some time ago I bought two bottles of Joy's Vegetable Sarsaparilla and have only had one attack since and that was on the second day after I began using it."

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

Report of the Session at Fort Bragg.

Good Attendance, and a Profitable and Pleasant Time.

(Special to the REPUBLICAN PRESS.)

Supt. W. K. Dillingham called the Institute to order at 9:30 A. M. The exercises opened with the song "America." Prof. Whipple of Ft. Bragg made an appropriate address of welcome which was responded to by Mr. Babcock of Ukiah.

Prof. Childs and Miss Schallenberger of the State Normal School at San Jose being present, Prof. Childs was introduced, and captured the teachers by his happy and suggestive remarks.

AFTERNOON.

After the rendering of an exquisite song by the singers under the management of Mr. Westerman, Mr. Babcock of Ukiah, made the following report from the Committee on organization:

Com. on Music: Mr. P. B. Westerman, Mrs. Kelton, Miss Stanfield, and fifteen others.

Vice Presidents: J. M. Cleland, James Barbee, Geo. Sturtevant.

Secretaries: Mrs. M. A. Kelton, Miss Ruth E. Bourns.

Com. on Queries:—Miss E. M. Fowler and Mrs. A. W. Griffin.

Mr. Cleland of Ukiah was called to the chair, and a paper on "Manual Training" by Prof. Childs was in order. This gentleman took the floor to address the institute on "The State Series of Text-books" instead. He first gave a history of the adoption of the present series, and also of its workings, and at once called for criticisms on the series. Mr. N. P. Howe said the Third Reader was full of mistakes, especially of punctuation Mr. Babcock said the books of the series were not numerous enough—one book containing too much, not allowing new books often enough. Others followed in the same line, when Miss Schallenberger said the First Reader should be made more interesting and that there be more books in the series. This was the general sentiment expressed by many others.

He called for results of experience in the use of supplementary reading of a current kind. Mr. Young thought it a good practice of teaching intelligent reading of newspapers. All present favored the suggestions of Prof. C. to publish a monthly pamphlet to meet this need.

Mr. Babcock thought the advanced grammar good for a three years course. Mr. Gliddon of Pt. Arena said it needed more directions concerning punctuation; Mr. Sturtevant thought it a good book if properly used—that the objective method and much writing exercises should be used. It was agreed there should be two books. The speaker made the excellent points that technical grammar belongs only to the highest grades, and that an arithmetic should contain no rules or answers.

Suggestions on the History were made by Messrs. Babcock, Gliddon, Sturtevant, Higgins, and Miss Cleveland of Ukiah, notably Mr. Higgins who voiced a deserved condemnation of the "dry bones," figures, blood, and battle of the ordinary history.

The speller escaped with a scratch on the binding. Prof. C. urged the overwork of the State Board of Edu- and called for candid criticisms looking towards early revisions.

After recess a resolution inviting all interested visitors to participate was adopted. Mr. Babcock talked on "The Course of Study." He regarded the Course as suggestive only.

EVENING SESSION.

Music and songs were rendered by Ft. Bragg talent. Mr. Young recited, and refreshments were served by Ft. Bragg ladies.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Music.

Roll call.

Reading of minutes.

The text book discussion was continued.

Miss Schallenberger took the floor on "Observation Lessons." She scored the mercenary teacher who works for his salary alone. It pays, even in salary, to do all that can be done although the salary is low for the time.

Continuing, she said: The end of right primary methods (especially applied here to language) is to give the child power; to lead him to think. Oral instruction arouses interest and gives them something to think about.

They cannot read "naturally" unless they are expressing themselves about something they know about. Not the mechanics of language; let the capitals and punctuation alone at first. Lead them to have thoughts. Don't ask, "Did you ever see a rose?" They already know this. They are searching for new ideas. Give them practice in the power of observing. Do not at this stage require them to answer in full sentences.

The second step is modeling or drawing the object. Here do not discourage exaggerated expression. It is not drawing in fact, but simply expression.

Direct their observation. Vary your words; the children so extend their vocabulary. Do not violate nature or natural expression in a single point. Let objects be in season and familiar. It is not the idea to teach anything, but to lead them to observe.

Again memory has been too much left out in the reformed education, perhaps. "Children should be filled when young with beautiful gems of literature." Remember that rhyme clings to the little hearts.

She read some beautiful selections in a highly exquisite manner. The whole talk was a rare and able treat.

Mr. Haston of Ukiah pointed to the necessity of adopting such methods as will establish a natural connection between the kindergarten and primary. This was also urged by Prof. Childs.

Mrs. Griffin of Gualala read a paper on "Our Profession in its Relation to the Future Welfare of Our Country." Selections: Education of conscientiousness is necessary to government of the people and by the people. Misgovernment is the rule especially in our large cities. Greed of gain and inordinate love of distinction is a menace; so likewise is foreign influence. Upon us devolves largely the problem of salvation. Let us fill the young people brim full of patriotism. Let us keep our national flag before them, and emphasize national holidays. Let us raise the moral standard. This paper was grand.

AFTERNOON.

Mr. E. Brown of Mendocino presented a scheme for savings of money by children; when the teachers and their friends embarked on an excursion to Glen Blair that had been kindly provided by the resident lumber company.

EVENING SESSION.

Miss R. E. Hubbell rendered a superb recitation and Miss Alice Davidson sang a delightful solo as introduction to a lecture by Prof. Childs. The speaker said the demand for professional teachers is greatly increasing. Besides, the loss to the ranks by marriage alone is equal to the total Normal graduation in the State. High schools must be established. While our country schools are superior to those of any Eastern State, our town and village schools will not even compare with the same of those States.

Miss Schallenberger's paper on "Manual Training," which followed, was a thorough presentation of this great work that is coming and just innovation and the newest step in making complete men and women.

THURSDAY.

Prof. Childs preceded Miss Schallenberger's lesson to a class in Manual primary work by saying that, within five years, the kindergarten would in his judgment be incorporated in the State schools.

This model lesson of Miss S. was apt, comprehensive and thorough, and will be the beginning of better things to many of the teachers.

The Kindergarten and Manual training are emphatically natural, above all it has God in it, and so represent the very soul of teaching science. They have come to abide.

AFTERNOON.

A discussion on examinations and promotion took place. As usual, an attempt was unsuccessfully made to settle the question whether there should be percentage markings or examinations as a test. One valuable thing agreed on was that the teacher should take no work home to do, but should be a free citizen outside of school hours.

Mr. Watson is not a teacher from choice, but his lesson on "Music" was enjoyable.

EVENING SESSION.

There was an interesting program of music and recitations. Prof. Childs closed his very valuable and instructive talks by speaking on "The Dollars and Cents in the Manual and Observation Training."

He spoke of the fact that students of San Jose discovered the scale-bug-eating beetle. It is to be hoped, however, that other schools will adopt Manual Training so that the Normal school will not be compelled to do the work, but will be left free to the training of teachers in the principles of mind and teaching.

FRIDAY.

This day's proceedings were presented as follows:

Mr. Glidden, a paper on "Arithmetic in the Schools." He said prepare the lesson before hearing the recitation, make a companion of the pupil.

Acknowledge your deficiency to him. Do not talk too much. Be a master of the pupils' minds.

Dr. Brown, a warm hearted address in which he invited the teachers to attend a drama prepared for them by citizens of Ft. Bragg.

Mr. Geo. Rhodes, a paper on "The Portent of Recent Events."

Miss Jamison, a paper on "Primary Numbers." She mentioned untiring energy, a loving disposition, and full knowledge of the subject as necessary to success.

Mr. Sanford, a talk on "Advanced Penmanship." This was brief, practical and comprehensive.

Mr. Cummins, a paper on "Primary Reading."

Mr. Williamson, "Our Friday Evening Amusements,"

AFTERNOON.

Miss White read a strong and clear paper on "Development of Education in the Sandwich Islands."

Mr. Young read a paper on teaching the Metric System.

After a short consideration of the querry box, resolutions were adopted as follows:

1. Tendering thanks to Prof. Childs and Miss Schallenberger of San Jose State Normal.
2. Thanks to Red Men's Dramatic Club for drama presented, "The Confederate Spy."
3. To Ft. Bragg Redwood Company for excursion to Glen Blair.
4. To the ladies of Ft. Bragg who furnished flowers to the Institute.
5. To Supt. Dillingham for the conscientious and efficient manner in which he conducted the Institute.
6. To the Board of Trustees of Ft. Bragg, committees on arrangements and entertainment.
7. To the members of the band for music.
8. To the Baptist Church for use of building.
9. To Mrs. McCallum of Glen Blair and the people of Ft. Bragg generally.
10. Resolved, that the teachers of Mendocino County, realizing the great evil of strong drink tending to counteract and destroy our efforts for the proper development of the rising generation, do pledge ourselves to use every effort, in the school room and out, to impress all with the danger of the cup and with the urgent necessity of abolishing the saloon.
11. Resolved, that we use all our influence as teachers to eradicate the deadly cigarette habit among boys.
12. Whereas, death has taken from the ranks our fellow worker, Miss Fannie Forsythe, be it Resolved, That the profession has lost an able follower, society a useful and honored member, and all who knew her a true friend; that we express our heartfelt sympathy for those upon whom the bereavement has so suddenly fallen.
13. Whereas, death has taken from our ranks our fellow-worker, David Shull, be it Resolved, That the profession has lost an able follower, society a Christian member, and all who knew him well a true friend; that we express our heartfelt sympathy for those upon whom this bereavement has so suddenly and heavily fallen.

Miss Schallenberger's list of books were unanimously recommended to the teachers.

All were delighted with the graciousness of the Ft. Bragg people.

It is to be hoped that every true teacher will discourage all those entering the profession who do not intend to make it a life work. Your reporter was enthused with the efficiency and ability of the County's teachers, and is of the opinion that the motto teaching for teachers adopted and carried out is the line upon which to work in order that California's educational system may be the grandest on earth.

Following are those who attended:

THE SOCIAL SEASON.

Society as She is Promised the Coming Season.

The coming social season in Ukiah promises to be a lively one.

Following the events of this week November opens up with the promise of considerable in the way of entertainment. A course of lectures at the M. E. Church is advertised; the "District Skule" and the "Sleeping Car," a farce, in the Opera House, are among the near futures. The Tennis Club have a heavy drama in contemplation, also the I. O. G. T.'s "Social Glass," for December. Then follows the holiday gayeties which will include a ball at the Opera House Christmas, and the Annual ball of the Firemen on New Years.

Appropos to this we may mention that the Opera House is to be renovated, re-ventilated, and the stage enlarged and equipped, and after Jan. 1st will be under new management. An effort will be made to secure some first-class companies for the coming play season. The promised improvement in the Opera House will stimulate interest in all the departments of society entertainment.

In the same line may be mentioned the Ukiah Orchestra described elsewhere. This orchestra has been doing hard practice, and is now ready to play upon any and all occasions. A good orchestra that could be depended upon has been needed, and Ukiah now has it.

Pitner Honorably Acquitted.

The case of the people vs. D. G. Pitner, a prominent rancher near Ukiah, came up for final action last week in the Superior Court.

Since the preliminery examination some four months ago which bound him over in the sum of $2000, considerable interest has been taken in the case.

He was accused of poisoning chickens belonging to a neighbor of his, Mrs. Burke.

The evidence of the prosecution was conflicting and changing, and was easily overruled by the rebuttal. For example the principal witness, Wm. Newton, said he saw Pitner at 9 o'clock Sunday morning put strychnine on meat and put it in Mrs. Burke's yard, and the defense showed by five witnesses that he (Newton) left the ranch before 8 o'clock that morning.

Dr. Hudson, expert, testified that he had made a scientific analysis of the contents of several of the chicken's gizzards and found no trace of poison. This testimony also had great weight with the jury.

The verdict was an honorable acquittal.

District Attorney White being sick, T. L. Carothers Esq. and W. P. Thomas Esq. conducted the prosecution. J. A. Cooper Esq. was for the defense.

The New Orchestra.

The new orchestra played for the first time in public last night, at the M. E. Church south entertainment. The pieces were a "Medley Overture," by E. Boettger, and "Visions of the Past," andante and waltz, by T. H. Rollinson.

The playing was strong, expressive, and in good time, The orchestra is made up of W. A Phelps, first violin; Sam Obar, second violin; J. H. Saunders, cornet; Geo. Jamison, trombone; Chas. Duncan, bass viol; Miss Mable Ames, piano.

The combination is a strong one, every part being particularly to place. An orchestra has been needed, and this combination promises all requirements. They can adapt themselves to concerts, entertainments, or dances, alike.

A Peculiar Case.

The death of Jesse O'Neal, reported elsewhere, is a peculiar case. He died from what is called by physicians, Spanemia, or a disintegration of the blood. The blood commenced to weep three weeks before death, and oozed from the mouth, gums, nostrils, eyes, and from tender portions of the skin. The disease is very rare, and this case is especially peculiar because no reason for the development of the disease can be found.

SENSATIONAL SHOOTING.

Ed J. Livernash Attempts the Life of Mr. Ethelridge.

Brief accounts through Constable Overmyer reached us yesterday of the attempt on the life of Mr. Ethelridge, a prominent citizen of Cloverdale, by Ed J. Livernash, formerly of that place.

At about 2 o'clock yesterday morning Livernash entered Ethelridge's house, woke him up, and asked for $150. It was given him and while Ethelridge was drawing up a note Livernash pulled two pistols and began firing at him.

Several shots were fired at short range. One bullet passed through the flesh under the chin, another grazed the mouth, and a third tipped the nose. None were serious wounds. The shooting aroused the inmates and the neighborhood and Livernash was placed under arrest, and taken to Santa Rosa.

The only explanation offered for the strange act is that Livernash is insane.

He and Ethelridge had always been good friends, and Livernash had talked some of late of getting Ethelridge to draw a will in his favor. He came up from Healdsburg Wednesday, accompanied by his brother and sister, who, it seems, were watching him.

They had all retired for the night, when the next developement was the scene reported above.

CLIFTON'S PUMPKIN.

A Round Valley Production of Mammoth Size.

It was raised in Round Valley and was sent as a present to Mr. Stapp proprietor of the Curtis House by E. The fair is over, but the pumpkin shall not go unrepresented, hence this report. On Thanksgiving Mrs. Stapp will convert the mammoth into pies, a la Missouri, and our epicurean editor looks forward to the event with esculent gusto.

The passengers with one accord answered: "The El Dorado". The driver whipped up and drove on. The gentlemen were seen buying quite a bill at the store this morning.
